HEADLINE: The long-term view of Reilly Tar's chief

BYLINE: ANN SLAKTER in Dayton

BODY:

There aren't too many executives in the chemical industry who can boast that their name and their company's name are one and the same. Nor are there many who have worked steadily in the chemical industry for the past 55 years. But Peter C. ("Pete") Reilly, chairman of Reilly Tar & Chemicals (Indianapolis) -- a business his father founded in 1896 when he bought a tar distillery with a borrowed $ 2,000 -- has both those distinctions.

That longtime experience in high-level corporate positions has given Reilly extraordinary depth and perspective, in the view of some industry sources. "Pete Reilly is one of the pioneers of the industry," says Myron Foveaux, assistant director of government relations at the Chemical Manufacturers Assn. (CMA), who has known Reilly for more than 20 years. Foveaux adds, "He has experienced so many things over the history of the industry that he has an extremely well-balanced view of what makes it tick."

"What has been a tremendous asset to our firm is Pete's ability to get to know and be liked by a lot of very important people, including CEOs of the biggest companies," says nephew Thomas E. Reilly, Jr., Reilly Tar's president. He also cites Pete Reilly's wisdom gleaned from years in the business that has "helped steer us through some of the country's economic problems. How many executives today were managing in the Depression?"

Family-owned

Reilly Tar & Chemicals has come a long way since 1932, when Pete Reilly officially came aboard, and its sales stood at $ 5 million. Still family-owned, the company claims to be the world's largest maker of pyridine and its derivatives, as well as a major producer of coal tar pitch and creosote oil, and its sales are estimated at $ 150 million/year. Reilly Tar employs about 700 people worldwide and has two major chemical plants -- one in Indianapolis, another in Tertre, Belgium -- as well as four coal tar refineries.

Incorporated in 1905 as the Republic Creosoting Co., it produced pitch and creosote oil, treating wood with the creosote. Some years and a few acquisitions later, the company became Reilly Tar & Chemical.

While his career at Reilly Tar spans 55 years, Reilly's experience in the business actually goes back even further, to his childhood. Born in Indianapolis in 1907, Reilly's earliest memory of the enterprise is a trip he took with his father to the plant where the company treated wood planks used for railroad cross ties and for paving streets. The wood-treating business was a profitable one for the fledgling company during its early years, when many a municipality considered wood blocks an ideal road surface -- one that was both durable and that would "give" under horse hooves.

Joining up

From his childhood on, Reilly never thought of doing anything other than joining the family business. "It just seemed the natural thing to do," he says. He grew up in Indianapolis and was graduated from Arsenal Technical High School in 1924. From there it was on to the University of Colorado, where he majored in economics and played varsity basketball and baseball.

As preparations for entering the business, Reilly and his brother, George, worked at the company's Provo, Utah, coal tar refinery the summer of 1925. "We had a different job every week," he reminisces. He was graduated in 1929 and entered Harvard Business School in 1929, finishing his MBA in 1931, ready to start in the family business.

Although 1932 was in the depths of the Depression, Reilly's father, known as "P. C." Reilly, was intent on pushing ahead with the expansion path that was to make the company a major factor in the tar-refining industry. Toward that end, he bought the bankrupt International Combustion Tar & Chemical. That acquisition brought six additional tar refineries under the Reilly Tar umbrella.

The year 1932 also was an eventful one for young Pete Reilly. In September, he married Jeanette Parker. And later in the year, he was transferred to Reilly Tar's New York City sales office, after a break-in stint at the company's Newark, N.J., plant.

In 1935, when the Eastern regional sales manager retired, Reilly was made vice-president for sales of the eastern region. He took on increasing amounts of responsibility, and in 1952, on the death of his father, Reilly returned to Indianapolis as president of the corporation. In 1959, he became chairman.

As chief executive, Pete Reilly appreciated the potential impact that new technology might have on the business. And it was under his leadership that Reilly Tar made its leap into the world markets with its development of synthetic pyridine

The stage had already been set back in 1929, when Reilly's father had reacted to what he had seen as a decline in the creosoting business. Reilly, Sr., built a laboratory near the Indianapolis plant designed to research the potential for separating products from coal tar. The first major product was carbolic acid or phenol, followed by naphthalene, carbazole, carburizing compounds, flotation reagents and corrosion inhibitors -- over 100 products by 1940.

Pyridine potential

Pete Reilly and his research director, Frank Cislak, were convinced that there was a great market potential for pyridine products, far greater than could be supplied from the available natural pyridine. At that time, those chemicals were extracted in small quantities from coal tar distillates.

They succeeded in synthesizing pyridine -- using formaldehyde, acetaldehyde and ammonia. Along with it, they produced alpha picoline, from which they made a pyridine derivative called 2-vinylpyridine. Now, almost every American tire manufacturer uses the product in a latex that bonds the tire cord to the rubber, says Reilly Tar. The company says it is the only producer of 2-vinylpyridine in the U.S. Current capacity stands at 1,500-2,000 metric tons/year.

The company's pyridine compounds are used in the manufacture of agricultural pesticides, pharmaceutical products, rubber products and food additives. But Pete Reilly can recall his big gamble on pyridine's potential, putting in a plant in Indianapolis for its commercialization with only one likely customer -- Du Pont.

Since then, there have been numerous customers, including Britain's Imperial Chemical Industries (ICI), which uses Reilly Tar compounds in its paraquat herbicide. About 10 years ago, ICI's paraquat business had become so large that the London-based company needed closer stores of supplies. Accordingly, Reilly Tar built a pyridine plant at Tertre, Belgium, in the mid-1970s.

Reilly Tar uses beta picoline to make niacinamide, generally known as vitamin B[3], an additive in foods, vitamins and animal feeds. About five years ago, the company entered into a joint venture with West Germany's Degussa to sell niacinamide in Europe and the U.S.

Competition

Reilly Tar continues to emphasize new technology, spending about 4% of sales on research and development (R&D). "We're trying to expand our specialty business," Reilly says. "We've got a niche, but we do have competitors."

The company's chairman relates, "For some time we've felt that we need something besides coal tar and pyridine chemicals. So we've been looking for a new product line."

The company has some specialty polymers, although the volume is still small, notes Reilly. Electrochemistry is a new area for Reilly Tar, and it says it has developed a cell that it is offering it to electrochemical consumers.

While chemicals have remained Reilly Tar's core for more than nine decades, the company also has developed another interest. In recent years, Reilly Tar has been investing in real estate and is a limited partner in several office buildings located in downtown Indianapolis.

As Pete Reilly looks back at his accomplishments with Reilly Tar, he is most pleased with the part he played in helping to spur the global expansion of the company. "We had a man selling in Europe even before the ICI business developed," he asserts proudly. "We're getting quite a bit of business from Japan, Korea and Taiwan. We're supplying China out of Belgium and are even marketing to Eastern Europe. We sell all over the world."

Original products

Along with its quest for new markets and products, the company still sells its original products. Creosote oil is still sold to wood treaters, although Reilly Tar itself stopped treating wood in 1972. Reilly markets its coal tar pitch to the aluminum industry, which uses the material to produce electrodes and binders. Pitch also is a component in roofing compounds and in coal tar pipeline enamel, a protective for underground pipelines.

Today, Reilly says, his company is a small factor in the overall coal tar market. Sales to the aluminum business have been slack for the past several years because of tough conditions in that industry. "Power costs will probably move the aluminum business offshore and to Canada, where they have cheaper energy," Reilly predicts.

But he remains optimistic that there will be other outlets for coal tar. "We feel something will replace the aluminum business. After all, coal tar does have 700 compounds," he comments.

As for the prospects for the company's current mainstay products, Reilly says that the outlook is brightening for one in particular. On Reilly Tar's vinylpyridine business: "Vinylpyridine seems to be coming back rather strongly in the last three months," Reilly says. "That could be due to an increase in tire replacements."

In weighing future opportunities, Reilly Tar has been actively looking for acquisition possibilities, relates Reilly. The most attractive prospects are in specialty chemicals "related to our chemicals, skills and know-how," says Reilly, who gives some detail about the breadth of the company's exploratory work. "We've examined a few, but haven't made a decision yet," he notes. The company is doing acquisition scouting in the U.S., Europe and the Far East. "If we're lucky, we'll make one some time this year," Reilly predicts.

At the same time that it is looking on the outside, Reilly Tar also is planning an internal expansion of its product line, says the company's chairman. In the development stage are some polyvinyl pyridines that have specialty uses. There's one called D-MAP, used as a catalyst; and another polyvinyl pyridine used as an acid scavenger in some reactions, says Reilly. "The chemical business, looks very good to us," he adds, "We've been marketing it worldwide. We're very bullish on the prospects of the pyridines and specialty chemicals.

The area holding the most promise for Reilly Tar is specialty chemicals. Currently, sales in that area are ranging up to 10-15% of the total business. "We're looking for more specialized applications," explains Reilly. "For example, we've become very adept at sodamide reactions and are looking for other uses of that technology."

Activities

Reilly says he tries to get his exercise on the golf course and enjoys playing bridge. Their three daughters married, Reilly and Jeanette make their home in both Indianapolis and Keystone, Colo. He has devoted a good deal of his time to community activities. He has served on various corporate, civic and association boards, including Environmental Quality Control, Goodwill Industries Foundation, Indiana National Bank, Butler University, United Fund of Greater Indianapolis, Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, Junior Achievement of Indianapolis, Chemical Specialties Manufacturing Assn. and CMA.

"The biggest challenge I face as chairman of a private corporation today is keeping ahead of the U.S. Congress and their regulations," Reilly laments. He adds, "That includes environmental rules, pensions, and we're facing a big challenge in the changes of the tax laws. With less depreciation in some areas, we have less money to plow back into the business. The government is taking too much from industry."

A modest man with a quiet sense of humor and, he makes clear, no plans to retire in the immediate future, Pete Reilly has seen tremendous changes in the chemical business. "The biggest change has been in the [increased] size of the successful companies and, of course, the products that they have. A lot of products on the market today were not even dreamed of years ago." Reilly adds with a smile, "When I started, the chemical business was in toddler clothes."

Conus Chemical

Conus Chemical Company, Inc. (aka Berg Chemical), a New York Corporation, conducted a chemical repackaging/distribution business in buildings #4, #5 and #7 which are situated on the western portion of Lot 4. In September of 1984, Conus purchased the assets of Berg Chemical Company which included accounts, equipment and chemical inventory. Berg Chemical had operated a similar business in the Bronx, New York. The New York City Department of Environmental Protection performed a publicly funded cleanup at the Bronx site in July, 1984. Various chemicals were found improperly stored at the facility.

Norpak Corporation and Conus were both issued Directives by the Division of Hazardous Waste Management on April 16, 1987. The Directive indicated that hazardous substances were improperly stored in building #7. Some of these drums had discharged their contents. Both companies were directed to repack leaking containers, segregate materials on site by hazard class and compatibility, and engage a qualified contractor to submit a cleanup plan. No actions were taken to correct the noted problems.

Numerous incidents have occurred at Conus Chemical Company which have required responses by the Newark Office of Emergency Management and NJDEP, Bureau of Emergency Response. In June of 1987, a drum of benzyl chloride was emitting hydrogen chloride vapor through a pinhole leak. The drum had been previously owned by Berg Chemical. The BER used Spill Fund monies to hire a contractor who neutralized and contained the fuming drum. Efforts made by the Department to contact Conus personnel were unsuccessful.

Conus Chemical was evicted from Norpak's property on December 31, 1989. An inspection conducted by the DHWM, Bureau of Metro Enforcement noted discharges of hazardous substances throughout the inside and outside of the facility. Conus and Norpak were subsequently cited for violations under the Spill Act. On January 31, 1990 a fire occurred in an outside debris pile near building #8. The USEPA inspected the Conus facility and found approximately 1,000 drums and containers with acids, flammables, laboratory reagents, oxidizers, petroleum products and solvents improperly stored.

On February 9, 1990 the NJDEP officially referred the site to the USEPA for a CERCLA Removal Action. Consequently, Norpak Corporation granted EPA access to the site for a cleanup. Remedial activities commenced on February 19, 1990. The objective of the project was to remove any threat of fire and explosion, and eliminate the threat of direct contact with hazardous substances abandoned on site. The cleanup was completed by March 30, 1990. Further remedial activities at the site are now pending. Berg Chemical Co. Inc. and Conus Chemical are investigating site contamination through ECRA.

Coronet Chemical Company, Inc.

Coronet Chemical Company, Inc., EPA ID #NJDO46954715, manufactured metallic sodium dispersions and pigment concentrations used in the teflon industry. In addition, the company was developing a sodium dispersion to destroy PCBs. The company occupied building #9 located to the east of Conus

PR Newswire

February 26, 1990, Monday

DISTRIBUTION: TO CITY DESK AND ENVIRONMENTAL EDITOR

LENGTH: 454 words

HEADLINE: EPA STARTS SUPERFUND ACTION AT CHEMICAL SITE IN NEWARK, N.J.

DATELINE: NEW YORK, Feb. 26

BODY:

NEW YORK, Feb. 26 /PRN/ -- The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has brought in personnel and equipment to start full cleanup activities at the Conus Chemical Corporation site, a former chemical repackaging firm on Roanoke Avenue in an industrial section of Newark, N.J.

The agency is using Superfund to defuse a potential public health threat posed by the site which contains leaking drums and incompatible chemicals, that are stored improperly. Superfund is the federal program to address sites that pose a chemical hazard to the public and/or the environment. EPA officials inspected the site at the state's request soon after a fire there on Jan. 31.

On Feb. 9, the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) requested that EPA use its Superfund authority to stabilize the site and remove any potential threats to public health and the environment as soon as possible. On Feb. 12, EPA established around-the-clock security at the site and initiated a preliminary inventory of the chemicals stored at the site.

EPA Regional Administrator Constantine Sidamon-Eristoff said, "Our restriction of public access has already stabilized the situation to a great extent. The plan of attack will be to investigate and deal first with the potentially shock-sensitive chemicals, which concern us most. We will arrange for their safe removal, transport and appropriate off-site disposal through the assistance of state, county and city officials. At the same time, EPA contractors will be separating incompatible chemicals by type and identifying leaking and deteriorating containers that need more secure packaging."

"We hope to complete this phase of the project in a matter of weeks. However, given the volume and variety, removing the other chemicals stored there will take some months," Eristoff said.

Site Background

Three fires have occurred in the past three years at the site, the last on Jan. 31. Substances known to be stored at the site include: perchloric acid, spent solvents, ether, methanol, oxidizers and petroleum products.

Last December, the property owner, the Norpak Corporation, evicted the operator of the facility, James Richards, for non-payment of rent. In response to a DEP notice of violation to the property owner and facility operator, on Feb. 1 Norpak agreed to perform the site cleanup under the direction of DEP.

On Feb. 16, Norpak and Richards agreed to give EPA complete access to conduct a Superfund cleanup. Before EPA's actions at the site, there was unlimited access to the premises by vandals and children.
